

Janisse Rosario-Schoepp

Janisse Rosario-Schoepp is Senior Program Officer and Director of Research & Policy at the Foundation. She has been with the Foundation for over seven years supporting strategic planning, program development, and grants management; research and evaluation; as well as public policy. Mrs. Schoepp oversees the Healthy Eating Active Communities and Preventive Health Measures Priority Areas of the Foundation's responsive grant making program. She works with foundation staff, Board and outside experts to develop strategies for grantmaking, explore new areas of potential interest, and to initiate special projects. She has developed the Foundation's first ever legislative agenda and with Foundation staff works to identify opportunities to advance the Foundation's mission through public policy.

Prior to coming to the Health Foundation, she worked four years at Florida International University at the Stempel School of Public Health. After receiving her Master's in Public Health in 2001 at FIU, Mrs. Rosario-Schoepp was asked by an associate professor to assist in the creation of a not-for-profit organization dedicated to reducing the prevalence of childhood lead poisoning. She is currently working on her doctoral dissertation with a concentration in Health Promotion and Disease Prevention.

Mrs. Schoepp is a member of the Miami Dade Public Schools District School Wellness Committee and Vice-Chair of the Health Promotion and Disease Prevention Committee.
